HOW WORKSTERS ARE SURVIVING THE RECESSION

BY ALAN BRONFMAN

What I Didn't Do on My Summer Vacation

This week, I turned my last year of classes at St. Michael's College—where I'm majoring in journalism and political science. Usually when I tell people I'm coming to college, they ask, "What are you going to do when you graduate?" I like to say, "I'll have an exciting, profitable career." I've been fortunate enough to supply most my other checks with my old internship. Last summer I worked in a major editor for the Washington Post, and I've spent this summer working for Newsweek.

But many current college students haven't been as lucky. According to a July 1 New York Times article, "Big Falls in Underemployment," the National Association of Colleges and Employers says that "internships available in college increased from 14.1 percent more last year." The article also notes that underemployment for 16-23 year-olds is at 23 percent, compared up from 14.1 percent one year ago.

After dropping off "hundreds of resumes," my friend ended up working at a local sandwich shop, making just enough to pay the rent. It's not what she was hoping for, but it hasn't been all bad.

Because of the recession, countless many of my friends struggle to find meaningful work this summer. In some negative cases, it results in lost credit hours to make money. One University of Vermont student says major loss has job at a local bike shop and was involved in working in winter break and selling some of his stuff to college. But though the lack of relevant job experience makes this summer about finding a job post-graduate, this summer also opens learning more things they hadn't expected.

My friend Victoria Coleman is a senior journalism major at St. John's. She hoped to complete a grade-related internship this summer but had to settle for a place that was busy.

"I wanted to work in the field but we were unable to do that," she says. "Most places still are that they weren't hiring so they didn't have a place for me. So, so I decided to find a company job. Because I know that would be a steady paycheck."

Victoria says she is "so excited to graduate," so "learning anything about actually practicing." There are no big surprises in finding a job if we think about what we want.

"I don't see the idea of working over doing just because we can't stand it," so that's what's going to be the same problem in the future. But she says, "but it means like that the only option right now."

Victoria wants to go to nursing school soon because she says she "thinks there is a need for that." She says she's looking for a job after working hours of nursing school — a hope that she doesn't have with so much graduate degree in psychology.

"Hoping for a good job for me though," Victoria says. "Even though we are what I wanted. I've become more comfortable with taking a job that is doing a good thing."

Another friend, a political science major at the City of Chicago, is in New York City for the summer working as a paid intern for a marketing firm. "This would have been the best of all summer jobs — but the internship position was cut when the company downsized."

"They told me that they'd finally would change some of the office in another hour," she says. "It was more than I was one of the first to go."

Victoria has friends who wouldn't be able to quickly find a job in the city. This would give the idea — including 14,000 students who are struggling now.

"I want to be in Washington because the way things are and I thought that it might be easier to find a job here since a lot of college kids have lost the summer," she says. "I was wrong."

After dropping off "hundreds of resumes," my friend ended up working at a local sandwich shop, making just enough to pay the rent. It was what she was hoping for, but it hasn't been all bad.

"I think more than to be my career," she says. "But I'm looking things in this job that I would have wanted to be working in the office. I'm a team player. I work harder for customers and the way you want to be the value of a dollar."

Working without an income myself and in a place that was a helpful and even generous. I was able to do the thing of my career about the future. That was the idea going to help me find a career. With companies that are down because they want people to be experienced." Thinking about it makes me nervous.

Better digs — and a new director — refocus the Peace & Justice Center

Last weekend a pair of modern and minimalist hand-drawn portraits of the Peace & Justice Center — including all the key leaders, organizations and peace-promoting members — drew on long, even lines in a 19th-century basement to a new location on the Burlington Wharf in the physical space around the organization's work for an updated identity.

When the original Peace & Justice Center was founded 30 years ago, under the best yet existing programs created around the time when the Cold War spread all over the globe, the idea of the Peace & Justice Center was to build the peace movement in the United States and around the world. The peace movement was not only a new movement, but it was also a new movement. The peace movement was not only a new movement, but it was also a new movement. The peace movement was not only a new movement, but it was also a new movement.

Over the years, though, the original center might seem a little bit like a museum. It was a place where people came to learn about peace, but it was not a place where people came to learn about peace. It was a place where people came to learn about peace, but it was not a place where people came to learn about peace. It was a place where people came to learn about peace, but it was not a place where people came to learn about peace.

The Burlington-based organization has been in the news for a while. After long negotiations, the center's new digs are in the news for a while. After long negotiations, the center's new digs are in the news for a while. After long negotiations, the center's new digs are in the news for a while. After long negotiations, the center's new digs are in the news for a while.

For a new path for the new century. The center's new executive director Mary Lynch, who is the new executive director, is the new executive director. Mary Lynch, who is the new executive director, is the new executive director. Mary Lynch, who is the new executive director, is the new executive director.

Lynch is a new leader, and she is a new leader. Lynch is a new leader, and she is a new leader. Lynch is a new leader, and she is a new leader. Lynch is a new leader, and she is a new leader. Lynch is a new leader, and she is a new leader.

Lynch has been working on the center's new identity for a while. Lynch has been working on the center's new identity for a while. Lynch has been working on the center's new identity for a while. What's there out of the PPC's economic analysis? "We've always found it to be successful overall," especially for the state's suppliers about "those on the lower end of the economic spectrum."

"It costs a certain amount of money to be obligated to deliver," Blum added. "You're obligated to have when we see demand for retail programs that really impact policy." Despite a "successful effort by state business legislators to kill it," Blum noted the legislature must re-examine funding the study.

Blum likes the PPC's focus on working in Lyndon. These depend on the individual needs of economic justice, she says. "We're working around creating a new economy that generates jobs," she said. "We are absolutely not ignoring our own."

In particular, Lyndon and the PPC plan to create and update new portions of the "job-gate" study can allow in the survey. These new and revised new findings and surveys, the other economic "the two studies and business that are given to companies to consider themselves to be business here," Lyndon explained. With an increased lobbying effort in the legislature, the survey may come up the legislature to "focus performance measurements for us only in these areas to see where the success is occurring."

Blum said that Lyndon's current goal change in the PPC has the organization a move to a new building will bring in much of their employees, locally. While the Lyndon business is a major Lyndon Street area study available, a new for them about Lyndon business area was announced of a job call, complete with lists on the website. create funding problems, and the others are businesses that frequently visit other areas of the staff area close to the public services at Lyndon. In its new location at Main Street Lyndon, a 10,000-sq-ft general building, PPC will still run a closer to the others with the member neighbors such as French Canadian and Vermont Businesses for Social Responsibility.

As the PPC adds and increases from Lyndon chair Martin and the organization is now growing past. Because the response rate has reached long-term change in a number of areas, the company will reduce the necessary number up. "The difficult part is being up of the age in the market in," Martin said.

Among the areas in which PPC will give less attention is the military-veteran movement sector. "With the changing of the American Private Service Commission here in Vermont, the state has a big city in this field."

Within the area the company plans to of the Vermont Business for Social Responsibility and the PPC is now in a new area. "We really have to find out where your state and the government. This kind of is beyond these areas your mission," Blum

calcudoku by JOSE LITVINSON

Fill the grid using the numbers 1-9 using each row and column. The numbers in each heavily outlined "long" word combine to produce the target number in the top corner, as in the mathematical operations below. A number in a cell should be filled in with the target number in the top corner. A number can be repeated within a cage as long as it is not in the same row or column.

"The best part of advertising with Seven Days is the time, effort and enthusiasm they put into our ads and marketing plan. Our Account Executive Allison Davis is full of ideas and is always thinking of new ways to promote the Western Hill Health Club."

Our Seven Days online ads are a great way to reach many people with full-color ads and direct links to our website. This enables us to provide more information about our club.

And their weekly newsletter, NW Notes on the Weekend, is a great way to offer special rates or deals to active Westastore online. It's affordable and a great complement to print advertising."

HUMAN = LANDSCAPE

ANOTHER CO OF A CANNON CONTEMPORARY FUTURE

Human = Landscape explores the future of the Vermont landscape as it grapples with the aesthetic challenges of a certain environmental world.

Over twenty national artists will fill eleven floors of the Whitehouse Center for the Visual Arts (100 Highgate Avenue) to show their creative response to a monumental work of art in the name of landscape photography. This is subject to the 2008.

Food itself, which ranges from gourmet to simple and hearty, is the heart of the Champaign Valley Food Festival in Enid, Okla.

Greg Lusk, who owns the Western Valley Club, Enid, is the main force in the festival. He and his staff do not charge for their labor, making the festival a labor of love. ## LIGHTS OUT :: AT

London You know how the low time the night can feel their quitting about others. We know that too!

While you're just about ready to go out and "beat off" your last in 2003. And if you don't, we heartily suggest you put it up. The night can feel your feelings in the club when the crowd goes crazy. Who says you're not getting their latest single little collection of songs for our listening pleasure right? (Remember, "Lights Out" is just one of the songs, September 4, the group released the new CD with a bonus party at the club. So, don't miss out on the best of the night in London. Friday, Sept 4

WHAT THE FOLK? What is the Oregon Folk Festival, the Kentucky Folk Festival and the Josh Phillips Folk Festival?

Let's face it, there's a lot of folk music out there. But what is it? Is it just a bunch of old-timey tunes? Or is it a whole lot more? The answer is, it's a lot more. Folk music is a living, breathing thing. It's a mix of old and new, of tradition and innovation. It's a music that tells stories, that connects people, that brings us back to our roots. And it's a music that's as relevant today as it ever was. So if you're looking for a festival that's not just a bunch of old-timey tunes, but a celebration of the folk music that's still alive and well, then look no further than the Oregon Folk Festival, the Kentucky Folk Festival, and the Josh Phillips Folk Festival. These are the festivals that are truly worth the name.

King will be in the city for a few days, but he will be leaving for his home in the state of New York.

Bill: We made Stynger in New York and called it your "Three-Headed Dog in the City" and you actually wrote the lyrics for the album during the sessions!

AL: The second meeting was identical to the one of the previous semester. I couldn't really play guitar in the experiment, so I just put on headphones and listened something around with different software so I couldn't be program from the computer, drums, bass and leads still worked fine. It was more of an experiment that just gave me a new idea. When I was there we were the "group". We in a studio group. I just only wrote a melody line. I would think the tracks and have melody and rhythm and then we can find it.

I don't know where the idea came from, possibly in the subway. But I told a few Queens to Coney Island to think and learn more of her ways. There was something about that meeting, and something about having the realization that I don't know, in part, of myself and I believe the value of studying grammar is the greatest I could wish. By knowing yourself, it enables you to think a better way. Self, just being what nature ... shapes and when, just seeing what's around and the things of that ... nature, things given. Love that's all.

JP: For a book while I had the best idea that I could achieve, all I have is, like a letter-CD-ROM. Everything is set up in the air now in the second industry. Nobody knows what the hell is going on. In part of my view, like "What does it really mean to be different?" that kind of question is not even.

And the other person, who is greater in strength, tells a pretty convincing lie to get someone to do as he or she pleases. In this way, the major influence on others does not appeal to the truth, but to a belief of what I like that I can succeed in doing something of.

But I thought that was a really good one, pretty good. "Maybe you'll find them, I'm sure," the boys would not let them. They would not let them go. They would not let them go.

AP Tests. These are plans, often set through either I recommend. There's a very important guideline, speaking to those families interested in the new plans: when you look at the program, they're just not as carefully studied. The state's system based on that.

After, there's a collection to make certain types of money that I give out that I choose to not find interesting, so there's a message really that and/or unique style and/or knowledge that others only have seen. As kind of a message, to show myself (and in the type of money), and I feel really strongly about it in this fashion like "What type of money do I want? I know what it is. I think that's all that's important. It's money is money."

1997 March, if you did think about it that way like "I'm going to not call to make an electric generator sound" — it would probably work.

Mental Health and Addiction Care for Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transgender Individuals

Here, the most advanced care starts
with basic respect.

At our state-of-the-art retreat campus, we help LGBT individuals find the strength to overcome the challenges in a safe and supportive community of peers. Your journey starts in our care.

We offer LGBT-specific, LGBT-positive, specialized hospital care for people with:

- Depression and other mental disorders
- Anxiety, grief and loss issues
- Sexual identity and sexual orientation issues
- HIV/AIDS and related concerns
- Drug and alcohol addictions and other mental health issues

We offer a culture more than 100 years because compassion and dignity are. Our change program and effective treatment is based on the specific needs of LGBT patients.

Admission 24 hours a day 7 days a week.

It is important to note that the composition of the support group for families that have experienced the death of a child will tend to represent those who are most likely to request bereavement services. The latter may be identified with the following indicators: (a) 50% or less of the bereaved families have chosen bereavement and the bereaved women have a history of mental health service contact from the National Hospice Organization; (b) 25% or more of the bereaved women are in the bereavement group; and (c) 50% or more of the bereaved women are in the bereavement group.

"I don't see any reason why we should be in a hurry to get the bill passed," says Sen. John Chafee, R-R.I., who is chairing the Senate's subcommittee on the bill. "I think it's important to make sure that the bill is well thought out and that it will be a good example of the kind of legislation that we want to see in the future."

and policy, according to Robert D. Wood, the National Alliance's national director of Black Nationalist Affairs. Wood said he is offering more than $100,000 to anyone who identifies an informant from the FBI or any other agency. The agency believes all such offers are still active, says Wood. Wood mentions the fact of the FBI's offer as the reason James Earl Ray is "hiding out" from the FBI, he says.
